Hatha Yoga - Kriyas Practice

Come join us for unique Hatha Yoga KRIYAS practice, designed for individuals who want to learn cleansing processes, to eliminate toxins and impurities from within the body. This workshop is appropriate for the absolute beginner and as well as experienced practitioner.

What are Kriyas?

Yoga science gives equal emphasis to a few cleansing processes, as it does to asanas and pranayama. To gain maximum benefit from yoga exercises, cleansing of the body systems is essential. Without eliminating toxins and impurities from within the body, the effects of appropriate yoga exercises are not ensured. Ancient yoga masters have described six scientific yoga techniques known as 'Shat karmas' or 'Shat kriyas' to get body cleansing. These techniques are not only important from normal physical and mental health point of view, but also they are much valuable in healing several psychosomatic disorders. The following six purificatory exercises (kriyas) constitute the Shat kriyas.

- | | | |
|-----------|----------|----------------|
| 1. Neti | 3. Nauli | 5. Kapal bhati |
| 2. Dhauti | 4. Basti | 6. Tratak |

What will we learn?

Neti - Jala Neti and Sutra Neti (using a warm saline solution and neti pot to cleanse the nasal passage, also learning to use the small plastic tube to cleanse the passage as well.

Dhauti - Vaman Dhauti, drinking a warm saline solution and bringing the water back up to cleanse the stomach and esophagus

Kapal Bhati – It is a technique of pranayama.

Tratak - The practice of trataka involves gazing at a point or at a particular object without blinking the eyes at all. In other words it is a process of focusing the eyes at a point and in turn to concentrate the mind also at that particular point. The point of gazing and concentration may be external (outside the body) or internal, while maintaining self-awareness. Practice of this technique yields the enhanced attention capacity and concentration power.
